Charlotte was just 21 last September when she broke her neck in an accident on a bouncy castle. She has been in Stoke Mandeville Hospital since then and her injuries are now completely stable. Unfortunately, she remains paralysed from the shoulders down.

She is, in all other respects, a perfectly normal 22 year old, full of life, full of fun, very fond of her dog, Harvey and (possibly even more fond) of her boyfriend, Gordon.

She has had help from the Health Service, Local Authority and from charities, but there is an endless list of other expenses which are currently not funded: among them, Charlotte needs a standing frame (cost £3500) and a sophisticated leg exerciser (£4000).
